Just had to sit through one of their, "don't be a person, be a mindless preprogrammed drone, lest you offend someone," presentations.

Just your daily reminder that these people are the problem.

HR does not serve the employees, it serves the corporation.

- link

[\[-\] Broc Lia](#) 5 points (+5 | -0) 9 hours ago (edited 9 hours ago)

Well no shit, nothing in a corporation exists to serve the employees, ultimately it all exists to get a job done. Shoe factories make shoes, not jobs or employee wellness.

- parent

[\[-\] SyriansFuckCorpses](#) 4 points (+4 | -0) 9 hours ago

Lots of people don't understand this fact though. They think HR exists to help the employees. Instead, HR exists to protect the company FROM the employees.

[–] FridayJones 1 points (+1 | -0) 6.2 hours ago

...ultimately it all exists to get a job done...

That seems naive. Unless the job getting done is personal empire building. Because that seems to be where most of the effort in the carpeted sections of the building is going.

I have never been hired by HR, always a manager who understands what HE wants from a prospect. HR would stack hundreds of resume's and ponder over them for months.....I hate HR cunts. No woman should ever be in a position of power

- link

[\[-\] Element115](#) 9 points (+9 | -0) 13 hours ago

We just can't get any good applicants. We need some automated system to discard these thousands of resumes that come in for every position.

HR has one job, which is to find applicants, and even then, they don't want to do that either. They use ATS until it gives them back a notification of a match. HR couldn't be more useless at this point

It's the worst in technical disciplines. They put a bunch of 90 IQ bimbos in charge of evaluating highly skilled professionals and somehow no one thinks it's a problem. These HR imbeciles always use simple-minded heuristics and rules-of-thumb to whittle down the list of candidates because they literally have no clue about the subject they're hiring for. They always have a degree and consider themselves "educated" -- but it's always a liberal arts degree, without exception.

They toss this shit through online AI like indeed, take months to decide, then let a skilled manager take the risk of hiring in person. So really, other than handle status change, or filing employee folders, what do they add in value. My niece is HR for a major Def contractor.....hires are recommended, she doesn't do shit, all who ya know

I just listened to a street shitter and a pregnant bitch talk about how not enough shit skins and women are getting promoted in our office. It never occurred to them that promotions are based on merit not sex and race. They are overtly racist and sexist but they think they are doing this to stop racism and sexism. The hypocrisy is palpable. I should sue because they are making a hostile work environment.

- link

[–] Onlio 11 points (+11 | -0) 13 hours ago

Most of my friends work for large corporations. All promotions are based on sex and race. They are told that promotions are based on sex and race. Most companies will only promote based on sex and race. Qualifications do not matter

- link
- parent

[–] dlion 4 points (+4 | -0) 12 hours ago

Which is why the white race is giving up on employment and promotions. Also why Microsoft and every big company has completely crap product offerings now, there simply isn't any innovation or product quality coming out of these places. MS famously fired the entire QA team, and replaced it with the insider program, where people could opt in to become free QA testers. And before long, most of these companies will be bought out once they fail, ushering in one massive conglomerate company similar to Samsung, which can provide everything from housing, to groceries, to software, to finance. The only reason the original names are kept, is to give the illusion of choice, so as to not wake people up from the slumber of tyranny

Uber loves diversity so much they hired a transexual hispanic felon to be the safety driver of their self driving test vehicle. That diversity hire watched tv on its phone while the self driving uber killed a homeless jaywalker. Uber learned nothing from this even though it probably knocked a few billion off their ipo.

This also means screwing you over if it is in the companies best interests

My wife had training last week and they asked if she worked overtime, she said yes. They then handed her a waiver to sign. She read it and found out that they were waiving the OT for missed meals because they work 12 hour shifts.

Is it even legal to have waivers for OT requirements? I'm pretty sure you can't sign a piece of paper that absolves someone from committing a federal crime against you.

Where I work, a job opening is announced publicly on our website. Then everyone can apply. Normally for more specialized positions, we only hire from within due to required experience.

However, HR decided to cancel an opening and do a direct transfer from another site due to some cunt's "reasonable accommodation" request. Thanks to this "RA", HR just gave her the job. Their excuse was "we think she's qualified" and it satisfies her "RA" request.

Turns out "Shaniqua" has no experience in what we do. She asked if there was any training. There is no training. It's a Lead position, meaning you should have already been doing the job. Second, HR is telling us WE have to accommodate her in which software to use to communicate with her since she will be a virtual employee and prefers not to use the established software that the entire company uses.

So yeah, this bitch hasn't even started yet and has already proven to be a worthless piece of shit.

lot of jobs like that do have a minimum weight lift requirement, but instead of there being a barbell set for you to prove it. The hiring manager usually just offhandedly asks in the last minute or so of the interview if you can lift however many pounds.

HR is hired by the corporation to protect it from the government. They are the litigation equivalent of security guards. Who you gonna blame here - the people hired to protect the interests of capital, or the government that provides the ongoing threat to those interests? You know what happens to employers that don't have HR? They get sued out of existence, that's what. HR is a symptom, not the problem.

Corporations (the legal fiction of an entity granted individual status whereby real individuals can take public gains and offload private liability) is where the corruption and poison of government truly enters the mainstream water, it's analogous to what corporations do all the time: toxic waste and poisoning the air, ceos and board members walk away liability free, pockets full of cash, while the public gets cancer. HR departments are merely a sub manifestation of this greater evil. The gloss and makeup for the Devil.

Just your daily reminder that these people are the problem.

They're a symptom. The reason you have to sit through those ~~cultural marxist indoctrination~~ sensitivity training sessions is because the company can be sued to hell and back for "bias incidents." Take away those laws and most companies go back to not giving a shit again. The ones that don't will have a hell of a time holding on to productive workers.

Most corporate HR departments are run by failed (((lawyers))) who set the policy, delegate the mid-level management to cynical, psychopathic control-freaks, who in turn hire dumb-as-dirt SJWs to do the low-level dirty work.

The only decent people in HR are some of the recruiters who have to do the real hard work of screening and hiring while playing by completely unrealistic diversity quota rules.

- link

[\[-\] AlexanderMorose13](#) 0 points (+0|-0) 12 hours ago

We used to not even have HR departments in a legal sense. Arguments and problems between employees and employers were so uncommon that it wasn't even deemed a necessary expense. Now, with the whole "feelings over facts" mentality, people tend to want to create their own micro societies of different ideas that certain groups agree upon. Rather than recognizing the rights of everyone as an individual and as a whole, there's only one side that gets to win. Though, in some ways, this is technically correct, both sides of the argument have merit, it is just difficult to accept for most snowflakes that someone who has an opinion that doesn't conform to yours might challenge you to think and actually explain yourself.
