The biggest takeaways (for me) were:

- If Black Lies Matter niggers wanna talk to you, tell them you want to talk to them but limit invites and only let them into small meetings/groups. Listen to their concerns but don't support or commit to anything.
- Let more spics into the country, enhancing border security won't be possible till 2019. In 2019, don't bother enhancing border security because it's pointless, let more spics in, oh wait if we send money to Mexico spics won't wanna come here so problem solved.
- Benghazi didn't happen because we fucked up their security and it wasn't terrorism at all. It was a protest that got out of hand because of an anti-mudslime video from the US, so it's everyone's fault and if anyone says otherwise, deny and call it a conservative conspiracy.
- When talking Benghazi, focus on motive (it was everyone's fault) and question whether or not US had credible intel that predicted it. The answer is always no, even though we fucked their security and made it easy to pull off at any given moment.
- Some spic businessman wants us to back him and give him power, charge him a $2,500 contribution for an invite to a spic reception we're hosting. Don't let up till he's given us another $74,600 -- note that as the amount "remaining."
- We raised a shitload of money in 2014 and 2015, even exceeded our goal by millions.

The political and media climate was, and remains, both emotional and pedantic. Legitimate outrage over the deaths of American diplomats mixed with partisanship. Then-Amb. Rice was accused of deliberately lying about the circumstances of the attack for political reasons, and Pres. Obama was grilled for his initial choice of terminology: "act of terror" instead of "terrorist attack." The word "Benghazi" itself has become a wry shorthand among the political left for hysterical conservative conspiracy theory.

[...] Susan Rice gave incorrect information on television, suggesting the attacks arose spontaneously from a protest of an anti-Islam video produced in the United States, which contradicted some early reports and which later proved false. The violence is now believed to have been a planned attack by extremists with ties to Islamist anti-Qaddafi militias, which were gaining power in the post-Qaddafi vacuum.

These motherfuckers know exactly what they're doing. Any time they feign ignorance or buffoonery on TV, know that they are conniving little shits who are lying to your face.

Im kinda with the make mexico great... not great again because that would be a lie. But trying to help mexico would possibly decrease the incentive for border crossers. If you ask me how this could work do you ever hear of building a wall against canadian invaderz? I get it canadians are white mexicans are mexican valid point but if mexico was slightly more prosperous maybe we could slow the flood down.

And to make it clear. We would stop sending jew isreal money all of it! They are the richest per capita minority in the world let them deal with their own shit.
