Tesla on Autopilot hits parked police car; no, this is not a repeat from last month, this is a whole new crash

251 Views

Autopilot-related crash in Laguna Beach results in injuries ver

2018

Model S allegedly being driven on Autopilot crashed into a parked ehicle in the city of Laguna Beach, California, earlier this week. The the Tesla suffered minor injuries, and fortunately no one was in the ar at the time. Both vehicles suffered extensive damage, and photos crash scene posted on social media by the Laguna Beach Police ent showed that most, if not all, airbags inside the Model S had d. The driver told the responding officers on the scene that the Model Autopilot mode at the time.

rom the scene indicate that the Model S delivered a glancing impact ear left quarter and side of the police car with its front right fender, damage to the sides of both vehicles.

arent Autopilot-involved crash adds to a string of incidents in which perated on Autopilot have crashed into the backs of emergency parked on the shoulder or stopped in a traffic lane.

his year, a Model S in California, also apparently in Autopilot mode, to the back of a firetruck that was parked in the left lane of a highway s responding to another crash. The driver of that vehicle was not Just two weeks ago another Tesla Model S drove into the back of a in Utah, causing serious damage to the front of the Model S. The 28- driver told police that Autopilot was engaged at the time and that she n looking at her phone.